Biographical Note

Marvin Harris was a prominent anthropologist, best known for developing the controversial paradigm of cultural materialism. He authored several important books in the field of anthropology, most notably The Rise of Anthropological Theory (1968) and Cultural Materialism (1979) as well as books that reached a wider audience, such as Cows, Pigs, Wars and Witches (1974) and Cannibals and Kings (1977).

Harris was born in Brooklyn, New York on August 18, 1927. After serving in the U.S. Army Transportation Corps (1945-47), he received his B.A. (1948) and Ph.D. (1953) from Columbia University. His first anthropology course was taught by Charles Wagley, who was influential in Harris’ decision to become an anthropologist. Harris joined the faculty at Columbia University after earning his doctorate and served as chair of the Department of Anthropology from 1963 to 1966. In 1980, he left Columbia for a position as Graduate Research Professor at University of Florida, where he stayed until his retirement in 2000.

It was in The Rise of Anthropological Theory that Harris coined the phrase “cultural materialism,” a subject he further elaborated on in Cultural Materialism. Cultural materialism, Harris explains, is a scientific research strategy “based on the simple premise that human social life is a response to the practical problems of earthly existence” (1979, xv). Harris applied the paradigm to explain various cultural patterns, such as food preferences and taboos, changes in U.S. family structure, and the collapse of Soviet and East European state socialism. One of his most controversial theories was that the Hindu prohibition of slaughtering and consuming cows in India arose because it was more economically beneficial to use cattle as draft animals rather than meat. He challenged Napoleon Chagnon’s views that Yanomami men were inherently more aggressive and violent by explaining that it was the pursuit of animal protein that was the cause of Yanomami warfare. Harris similarly argued that protein deficiency was the reason why the Aztecs practiced cannibalism.

Harris presented his theories beyond academic circles to a general audience by contributing a monthly column to Natural History Magazine. He also authored several popular books. In addition to Cows, Pigs, Wars and Witches and Cannibals and Kings, Harris also wrote America Now (1981), Good to Eat (1985), and Our Kind (1989). Harris also authored and edited several editions of two college-level introductory textbooks: Culture, People, Nature (first published as Culture, Man, and Nature in 1971) and Cultural Anthropology (first published in 1983, later editions coauthored with Orna Johnson). According to Harris, the 1975 edition of Culture, People, Nature “was the first anthropology textbook to be written cover to cover in a gender-neutral mode of discourse” (12/3/93 letter from Harris to Deborah S. Rubin, “Furlow - [The Teaching of Anthropology]”, Series 3. Writings, Marvin Harris Papers).

Although Harris is primarily known for his work as a theoretician, he also conducted ethnographic fieldwork throughout his career. Harris traveled to Rio de Contas, Brazil in 1950-51 to conduct research for his dissertation, Minas Velhas: A Study of Urbanism in the Mountains of Eastern Brazil. This research was also the subject of his book Town and Country in Brazil (1958) and his chapter, "Race Relations in Minas Velhas, a Community in the Mountain Region of Central Brazil" in Race and Class in Rural Brazil (Charles Wagley, 1952). He continued his research in Brazil in 1953-54 while serving as a research advisor for the Ministry of Education in Rio de Janeiro. As field leader of the Columbia-Cornell-Harvard-Illinois Summer Field Studies Program, Harris returned to Brazil in 1962 to study fishing villages in Arembepe. Prior to that, he also served as field leader for the program in Chimborazo, Ecuador in 1960.

In 1956-57, Harris conducted field research in Mozambique, at the time under Portuguese rule. He initially intended to study the influence of Portuguese rule on race relations, comparing the race relations in Brazil and Mozambique. He soon became aware, however, of the political brutalities that the Portuguese government was imposing on the people of Mozambique. Consequently, Harris decided to focus his research on labor exploitation in the colony. Antonio de Figueiredo, who later became an important figure in the Mozambique liberation movement, served as an informal assistant to Harris. Harris was also friends with Eduardo Mondlane, president of FRELIMO, the Mozambican Liberation Front. Because Harris was openly critical of the Portuguese government, he was forced to leave Mozambique before he completed his research. When he returned to the United States, Harris published Portugal’s African “Wards” (1958), a critical evaluation of Portugal’s colonialism. His publication was influential in eradicating the forced labor system in Mozambique a few years later.

Harris’ activism extended to the social and political unrest at home during the 1960s. He was vice-chairman of Vietnam Facts, an organization of professors in the United States who were against the Vietnam War, and was one of the organizers of the Ad Hoc Teaching Committee on Vietnam. In 1967, he brought an academic focus to war by organizing a symposium on the subject with Morton Fried and Robert Murphy at the American Anthropological Association’s (AAA) annual meeting. Together, they edited War: The Anthropology of Armed Conflict and Aggression, a compilation of the papers presented at the conference. During the 1968 student uprising at Columbia University, Harris was one of the few faculty members that openly sided with the students. Harris criticized the actions of the university administrators in his article, “Big Busts on Morningside Heights” (1968).

Due to his experiences in Mozambique, Harris also began to think about the distinctions between emic and etic perspectives, which he discusses in his book, The Nature of Cultural Things (1964). During the 1960s-70s, Harris experimented with the use of video recordings as an etic approach to collecting ethnographic data. He collaborated with the Bronx State Hospital to videotape domestic life in two Puerto Rican and two African American families. He also videotaped and coded behavioral streams of two Caucasian and two African-American families in New York City for his NSF funded project, “Patterns of Authority and Subordination in Low-Income Urban Domiciles.” In 1965 and 1992, Harris returned to Brazil to study racial categorizations and identifications, specifically the emic and etic differences in the perception of race. He published several papers on the subject, including "The Structural Significance of Brazilian Racial Categories" (1963), "Referential Ambiguity in the Calculus of Brazilian Racial Identity" (1970), and "Who are the Whites?" (1993).

During the 1980s, Harris was troubled by the rising popularity of postmodernist theory within anthropology. He believed that anthropology was a science and was concerned about the harmful consequences of postmodernist theory to the field. He organized a AAA session on postmodernism called “Anti-anti Science” in 1989 and participated in multiple conference sessions on the subject, including a 1993 session on "The Objectivity Crisis: Rethinking the Role of Science” at the American Association for the Advancement of Science (AAAS) meeting. “Anthropology and Postmodernism,” a revised version of his AAAS paper was published as a chapter in Science, Materialism, and the Study of Culture (Martin F. Murphey and Maxine L. Margolis, 1995). Harris also criticized postmodernist theory in his final book, Theories of Culture in Postmodern Times (1999).

While Harris thought that postmodernism was moving anthropology further away from science, behavior scientists began to see the relevancy of cultural materialism in their own research. In 1986, Harris was invited to give an address at the annual conference of the Association for Behavioral Analysis (ABA). His paper was titled, “Cultural Materialism and Behavior Analysis: Common Problems and Radical Solutions.” He also participated in a symposium on "The Integration of Cultural Materialism and Behavior Analysis" at the 1991 ABA annual meeting.

From 1988-90, Harris served as president of the General Anthropology Division of AAA. In 1991, he was given the honor of presenting the Distinguished Lecture at the AAA annual meeting. His talk was titled, “Anthropology and the Theoretical and Paradigmatic Significance of the Collapse of Soviet and East European Communism.” That same year, The Rise of Anthropological Theory was designated a Social Science Citation Classic.

Harris died at the age of 74 on October 25, 2001.

Scope and Content Note

This collection contains the professional papers of anthropologist Marvin Harris. The papers include correspondence, research materials, his publications, unpublished manuscripts, conference papers, lectures, subject files, teaching files, computer files, and photographs.

His research files document his ethnographic field work in Rio de Contas, Brazil, both for his dissertation and his racial categorization project; his research on forced labor in Mozambique; his videotape study in New York City households; and his India sacred cattle research. The collection also contains his research on food preferences and aversions, his files as a research consultant for the McKinsey Global Institute, and photos from his field work in Chimborazo, Ecuador and Arembepe, Brazil.

Over the course of his career, Harris also participated in several conferences and invited lectures. The collection contains some of the papers he presented as well as audio recordings of his lecture “Levi-Strauss and the Clam: An Open and Shut Case” and a recording of a radio interview. Also present in the collection are materials relating to conference sessions and symposiums that he organized, including the 1967 AAA session on Anthropology and War and his 1983 Wenner-Gren symposium on Food Preferences and Aversions.

Additional materials that may be of interest are materials documenting Harris’ activism in the 1960s at Columbia University, which include his anti-Vietnam War activities, as well as his involvement in the student protests of 1968 at Columbia University. The collection also contains Harris’ CIA, FBI, and Department of State records that he obtained through Freedom of Information Act requests, photographs from Harris’ service in the army in the 1940s, and photos taken in Brazil by Pierre Verger.

Harris corresponded with several prominent anthropologists, many of whom were Latin American specialists. Some of his noteworthy correspondents include Napoleon Chagnon, Derek Freeman, Morton Fried, Conrad Kottak, Sidney Mintz, Anthony Leeds, Claude Levi-Strauss, Darcy Ribeiro, Anisio Teixeira, Charles Wagley, and Karl Wittfogel. Also of special interest is his correspondence with leading figures in the Mozambique and Portuguese liberation movements, including Antonio Figuereido, Eduardo Mondlane, and General Humberto Delgado.

Restrictions

Access to student records (consisting of graded materials and student recommendation letters); grant proposals sent to Harris for review by grant agencies; and part of his faculty recruitment files is restricted until 2081. Series 10. Computer Files is also restricted due to preservation concerns.
Extent

The total extent is 39 linear feet (consisting of 84 document boxes and 4 record storage boxes) plus 61 computer disks, 19 cassette tapes, 1 7” sound reel, and 3 vinyl records, 1 oversize box, and 1 map folder. Of the total extent, 1.5 linear feet (4 document boxes) are restricted.

Provenance

The papers of Marvin Harris were donated to the National Anthropological Archives by his daughter, Susan Harris.

Related Collections

An open reel video from the collection was transferred to the Human Studies Film Archives. See Series 2. Research, Subseries. Videotape Research for more information.

More of Marvin Harris’ correspondence can be found in the papers of William Duncan Strong. Researchers may also want to consult the Human Studies Film Archives, which holds video oral histories of Charles Wagley (HSFA 89.10.5) and Lambros Comitas (HSFA 89.10.20), both of whom discuss Harris in their interviews.

Processing Note

The papers of Marvin Harris arrived at the National Anthropological Archives as a single accession in 2010. With the exception of the name subject files and some correspondence, the collection arrived in a largely unorganized state. The majority of the materials were loose and intermixed with unrelated materials. Some materials were in labeled folders, although the folder labels did not always match the contents. Although a concerted effort was made to organize the materials in a logical manner, the researcher may come across materials that are misfiled.

Whenever possible, original folder titles were retained. Folder titles assigned by the archivist are indicated by square brackets. Most, but not all, of the files were rehoused in acid-free folders.

Publications by other people were removed from the collection unless there were significant annotations by Harris or inscriptions by the authors. Most of the books were donated to libraries in various countries. Some were transferred to the Anthropology Library at George Mason University and to the Smithsonian Institution’s John Powell Library.

The processing archivist would like to thank David H. Price and intern Blair Smith for their help in processing this collection.

This collection was processed with the assistance of a Wenner-Gren Foundation Historical Archives Program grant awarded to David H. Price.

This series contains Harris’ research materials, including his field notes, research proposals, and research related correspondence. There are no research notes from his research in Chimborazo, Ecuador and Arembepe, Brazil in this series, however, related photographs can be found in Series 9. Photographs.

SUBSERIES: BRAZIL
This subseries documents his dissertation research and his research on racial categorizations. Files include his research proposals, field notebooks, drafts of a paper on Brazil, questionnaires, and drawings from his racial categorization research. SUBSERIES: FOODWAYS
Research files on food preferences and food taboos. Folders are arranged alphabetically by title. See also Series 4. Professional Activities for files relating to the Wenner-Gren symposium Harris organized on Food Preferences and Aversions. Folders are arranged alphabetically.

SUBSERIES: INDIA (SACRED CATTLE)
In his article, “The Cultural Ecology of India’s Sacred Cattle (1966), Harris hypothesized that the Hindu taboo of eating cattle was a result of economic and environmental factors in India. This subseries documents the debates surrounding the controversial theory and includes his statistical analysis, notes from his field research in India in 1967, correspondence, and papers and articles by others on the subject. This subseries also contains Harris’ collection of Indian wall calendar art that he refers to in Good to Eat (1998, 49); one is similar to the drawing that accompanied “India’s Sacred Cow” in Human Nature Magazine. Folders are arranged alphabetically.

SUBSERIES: MCKINSEY
In the early 1990s, Harris served as a consultant to McKinsey & Company, Inc., working on a globalization research project for McKinsey Global Institute. Harris served as co-manager on the project with William W. Lewis. This subseries contains correspondence, drafts of several manuscripts, Harris and Lewis’ article “Why Globalization Must Prevail.” Folders are arranged alphabetically.

SUBSERIES: MOZAMBIQUE
This subseries documents Harris’ 1956-57 field research on forced labor in Mozambique as well as his continued interest in the Mozambique liberation movement. Materials include questionnaires, field notes, research notes, correspondence with Eduardo Mondlane, and correspondence and photographs from Jaime Sigauke. For more materials on the Mozambique liberation movement, see Series 1. Correspondence and Series 5. Name Subject Files for correspondence with Antonio de Figueiredo. Folders are arranged chronologically.

SUBSERIES: VIDEOTAPE RESEARCH
Harris experimented with using videotape recordings as an etic approach to collecting ethnographic data during the 1960s and 1970s. This subseries mainly contains his research for his National Science Foundation (NSF) funded project “Patterns of Authority and Subordination in Low-Income Urban Domiciles.” For the study, video cameras were set up in the homes of two Caucasian and two African American families in New York City for two to four weeks. The families were filmed and monitored 24 hours a day. Harris and his team of assistants reviewed the recordings and coded the families’ actions. This subseries contains research on equipment, NSF proposals, coding sheets, data analysis, and project reports by Harris and Anna Lou Dehavenon. There is also a folder containing notes from a study on Macy’s Santa Claus that one of Harris’ students conducted for a seminar he taught at Columbia University; the seminar focused on using video cameras for ethnographic research. An open reel tape from the study was transferred to the Human Studies Film Archives. Folders are arranged chronologically.

SUBSERIES: OTHER RESEARCH
Contains notes and papers on various topics. Also included is a folder titled, “[Weirton Steel research],” which contains Harris’ research proposal, “Community constraints on employee ownership: the case of Weirton Steel;” the study was never carried out. Folders are arranged alphabetically.

Series 4. Professional Activities. 1960-1999

3 linear feet, 19 cassette tapes, 1 7” sound reel, and 3 vinyl records

This series contains Harris’ professional organization, conference, and invited lecture files. Materials include his lecture notes, conference papers, and files relating to conference sessions and symposiums that he organized, most notably his AAA session on Anthropology and War and his Wenner-Gren symposium on Food Preferences and Aversions.

SUBSERIES: AMERICAN ANTHROPOLOGICAL ASSOCIATION
This subseries contains AAA memos and conferences files, which include his conference papers and materials relating to sessions he organized. Of special interest are his planning files for the Symposium on Anthropology and War that he organized with Morton Fried and Robert Murphy for the 1967 annual meeting and the associated publication by Natural History Press. Participants were Alexander Alland, Paul Bohannan, Jr., C. R. Carpenter, Napoleon Chagnon, Stanley Diamond, Ralph Holloway, Frank Livinstone, Margaret Mead, Seymour Melman, Benjamin Paul, Elman Service, Sol Tax, Frederick P. Thieme, Andrew P. Vayda, and Anthony Wallace. The files also include correspondence with Theodosius Dobzhansky, who withdrew from the symposium due to conflicts with Frank Livingstone, Konrad Lorenz, and Robert F. Kennedy. Also in this subseries are materials relating to postmodernism in anthropology and controversy surrounding Dennis Tedlock and Barbara Tedlock’s editorship of American Anthropologist. There is little material documenting Harris’ work as president of the General Anthropology Division of AAA.

SUBSERIES: ASSOCIATION FOR BEHAVIORAL ANALYSIS
This subseries documents Harris’ relationship with behavioral analysts and the Association for Behavioral Analysis (ABA). During the 1980s, cultural materialism became increasing influential in behavioral science research. He was invited to give an address at the 1987 ABA annual conference and served as a discussant at an ABA symposium in 1991. This subseries contains a transcript of his address as well as correspondence with behavioral analysts.
SUBSERIES: WENNER-GREN
This subseries primarily contains materials relating to the Wenner-Gren “Food Preference and Aversions” Conference organized by Harris and Eric Ross in 1984. Files include correspondence and written transcripts of proceedings. A photo of conference participants is in Series 9. Photographs.

SUBSERIES: OTHER ORGANIZATIONS
This subseries contains memos and letters from organizations other than AAA, ABA, and Wenner-Gren.

SUBSERIES: CONFERENCES AND LECTURES
This subseries contains materials on conferences (excluding AAA, ABA, and Wenner-Gren meetings) that Harris attended. Files include papers he presented; lecture invitations; lecture advertisements; and lecture notes and transcripts. This subseries also contains audio recordings of his lecture “Levi-Strauss an Open and Shut Case” and his 1981 WRKO Talk Radio 68 interview.

This series contains files maintained by Harris with reference to his colleagues and students. The folders primarily contain unpublished papers; some contain correspondence. Folders comprised entirely of published papers were removed from the collection. Some prominent correspondents in this series include Napoleon Chagnon, Conrad Kottak, Claude Levi-Strauss, Darcy Ribeiro, and Karl Wittfogel. Also noteworthy is Harris’ file on Antonio de Figueiredo, which contains correspondence from the 1950s, during which he was exiled from Mozambique and escaped from imprisonment in Portugal to London. This series also contains correspondence from General Humberto Delgado, an important figure in the Portuguese liberation movement. Folders are arranged alphabetically by name.

This series contains Harris’ administrative and teaching files as professor at Columbia University and University of Florida. Harris taught at Columbia University from 1953 to 1980 and was at University of Florida from 1980 until his retirement in 2000. His students’ graded assignments and letters of references are restricted as well as some of his University of Florida faculty recruitment files. For more of his students’ files, see Series 5. Name Subject Files.

Harris’ activism in the 1960s at Columbia University is also documented in this series. Harris was one of the organizers of the Ad Hoc Teaching Committee on Vietnam and served as vice-chairman of Vietnam Facts, which later changed its name to Mass Media for Peace. Harris was also involved in the student protests of 1968 at Columbia University. In April of that year, students occupied five campus buildings to protest the university’s involvement in government wartime research and its controversial plans to build a gymnasium at Morningside Park. Harris was a member of the Ad Hoc Faculty Group, which was formed to act as mediators between the striking students and the administration. Violence erupted when the administration called in the police, which resulted in several people being injured and over 700 people arrested. Harris was one of the professors from the Ad Hoc Faculty Group standing between students and police in front of Fayerweather Hall, one of the occupied buildings. In his article, “Big Busts on Morningside Heights” (1968), Harris recounted the events of the protests and criticized the actions of the university administrators. He was one of the few faculty members that openly sided with the students. Materials from that time period include university memos, pamphlets, Harris’ oral history, and notes on Seymour Melman’s oral history. See Series 9. Photographs for photos from the protests.

The first three folders in this series are a few of Harris’ files as a student at Columbia University.

This series contains articles and books by other people. Most of the materials either have annotations by Harris or were inscribed by the author. Although autographed books were removed from the collection, inscriptions were transcribed and photocopies of the more substantive inscriptions can be found in this series. Letters and notes found inserted in other books removed from the collection were separated and also placed in this series. In addition, this series contains letters from publishers requesting promotional comments on books (also removed from the collection) that they sent to Harris. Also in the series are student papers about Harris, Harris’ review of a paper under consideration for publication, and grant proposals sent to Harris to review. The grants proposals are restricted.

This series contains photographs of Harris, his family, friends, and colleagues as well as his research photos. Most were taken in Brazil and include images of festivals, Arembepe fishermen, towns, plazas, buildings, Sugar Loaf Mountain, and people at work. Photos of Brazilians from Harris’ racial classification project are also in this series. There are also copy prints of photos taken in Brazil circa 1910-20s and photos by Donald Curry and Pierre Verger. Verger was the photographer for Race and Class in Rural Brazil, however, none of the photos here were published in the book. This series also contains photos of peasants in Chimborazo, Ecuador as well as photos from India, Harris’ service in the Army, and the 1968 protests at Columbia University.

Please note that some of Harris photos were originally mixed together or in mislabeled folders. Consequently, there are many photos that are unidentified. It is also possible that some of his other photos are misfiled.
